

German Rosetta Tales

Group Name: TBD Version 3.0

Group Members: Randy Shi, Dave Liu, Jaesung Lee, David Au

Group Number: 23

Description:

This app would permit the users to learn new words from foreign languages, which is very different than majority of our ideas. It is essentially a language learning app that uses the context clues methodology in order to reinforce children's learning capabilities. This particular app essentially focus on children and parents who wants their kid to learn other languages that is not English. Likewise, it can be used for adults who want to learn a foreign language at a slower, casual pace. Contextual learning is a gradual process; this app is not for people trying to take a crash-course in a language or who want to learn formal grammar and spelling. Instead, this app aims to develop knowledge of a language in a slowly integrated process that serves as a more natural way of learning a language rather than a fast-paced class.

Target Audience:

Our target users are those who have English reading comprehension at the fifth grade level and are trying to learn a new language, with low commitment to the task. Children whose parents want them to learn a new language, in this case specifically German, would be able to utilize a natural-developmental technique. Additionally, adults who want a low-fidelity commitment to learning a new language- more of a hobby than a skill- would find our product fun and intuitive.

Our Storyboard of the Project:

Q

"Alexa, teach me German!"

Ok, I'll read you a story. Tell me how many words per sentence I should substitute. Or say "Quick start" to use default settings.

Two.
